If

- 1) your component does not require the entire browser to be instatiated
- 2) you have the entire mozilla source tree checked out and built (browser is enough)

you might want to look at mozilla/tools/test-harness/xpcshell-simple/

the mozilla/network/tests/unit directory contains an example of how to use this simple harness another route would be to use venkman or firebug (or dump()) to determine exactly which line is causing the error. There are certain things that just can not be done from content.

You could also post your issue to the mozilla.dev.quality newsgroup (accessible via google groups).

As an aside, it is tough to diagnose these types of problems without d.Construct is an affordable, one-day conference aimed at those building the latest generation of web-based applications. The event discusses how new technology is transforming the web from a document delivery system into an application platform.

Last year saw the inaugural event, the first of its kind in the UK. Internationally renowned speakers from organisations including Yahoo!, the BBC and the Electronic Freedom Federation discussed hot-topics such as web application design, AJAX, API's and the mobile web.

This years event has an equally fantastic line-up of speakers, discussing everything from mash-ups and API's through to tagging and Ajax accessibility.

Pirate Map Prototype using Yahoo! Maps API

This is a test of using filters and blend modes in Flash to apply the parchment texture to the map API and to recolor the map elements. To zoom the map, grab the spyglass and drag the eyepiece. For those looking for deeper meaning, don't look too far. The project's point is to explore the flexibility of Yahoo! maps and how they can be integrated into the design of a site/application.
